State librarian's role: To help others

Nominee says it's important citizens receive accurate information

By Sheila Ellis

SPECIAL TO THE CAPITAL-JOURNAL

Jo Budler, newly appointed Kansas state librarian, describes herself as a people person.

"I like people a lot. I naturally want to help people," Budler says.

In late January, Gov. Mark Parkinson announced the appointment of Joanne "Jo" Budler to the post of Kansas state librarian. She will replace interim state librarian Marc Galbraith, who has served in the role since former state librarian Christie Brandau announced her retirement in June 2009.

Budler, who has spent the past five years serving as the Ohio state librarian, says the top job requirement for a state librarian is to be a good listener.

"In my job, you have to listen to others a lot," she said during a phone interview from Ohio. "I serve the librarians and the state to help them provide the best service possible to their residents, and they know their residents' needs the best."

She has visited more than 100 libraries, where she talked to librarians to find out what challenges they're facing.

"It's a collaborative effort," she said. "It takes a lot of listening, gathering information and synthesizing it."

Previously, Budler was the deputy state librarian for the Library of Michigan and the director of Network Services and NE-BASE, Nebraska's online computer library center network. She holds a master's degree in library science and a master's of fine arts in Writers' Workshop, both from the University of Iowa.

Jo Budler, who was appointed state librarian in late January by Gov. Mark Parkinson, looks forward to serving Kansas librarians and residents.

"We are very excited to welcome Jo to Kansas," Parkinson said in a press release. "Her 25 years of experience and leadership in state libraries will ensure that homes and schools across our state continue to receive the important services the Kansas state library has to offer."

Remaining relevant with new technology, such as the Internet, is one issue libraries across America are facing.

"We all use Google now. I use it myself," she said. "But the real challenge is making sure that information is accurate."

RECOMMEND A BOOK FOR THE KANSAS 150

As a lead up to Kansas' 150th birthday in 2011, the State Library of Kansas is seeking recommended books for a Kansas 150 list.

Nominations can be made until Oct. 31. The list of 150 notable titles will be announced at the beginning of 2011 and promoted throughout the sesquicentennial year.

The criteria for nominations: a significant aspect of the book must relate to Kansas. The book can tell a story about Kansas, its culture, its heritage or be historical in nature. In addition, the book may be written by a recognizable author who called Kansas home at some time in his/her lifetime; and the book may be from any genre, fiction or nonfiction, and suitable for readers of any age.

A submission form is available at http://kslib.info/kansas150/documents/150_nomination_form.pdf.

Budler says this is where library services come in.

The state library's mission is to deliver 21st-century library services and resources to all Kansans. Budler says she is committed to this mission.

"Libraries always have been about providing information to everyone," she said. "It doesn't matter who you are, where you live, we want to get information to you."

She said libraries are very valuable, especially when the economy isn't good.

"It is important that people can get to broadband Internet and reliable authenticated information," she said. "People need information so they may have a high-quality life, not just to write a paper."

The State Library of Kansas provides on-site and online information services for state and local governments, other state agencies, state legislators and legislative staff and local libraries and their users, as well as Kansas citizens, residents and visitors.

It shares resources and government information, educates librarians and trustees, promotes literacy and reading, and advocates for open and equitable access, intellectual freedom and excellence in library services and support.

One aspect of the Kansas state library system that appealed to Budler was the state's legislative reference library being housed inside the state library.

"I am very much in tune with state government and outreach to the library community and to the state government," she said.

Another area of expertise Budler brings to Kansas is her knowledge with library resource sharing.

"Not one library has all the information that a person might need," she said. "That's why it's important to have a good resource sharing mechanism between libraries."

She said Kansas is moving toward a single catalog for all libraries to use and share.

"That really appealed to me," she said. "It shows that the librarians here are thinking long-term, they are looking for a solution. ... We do it once and do it right."

Budler is scheduled to start in mid-March, upon confirmation from the Kansas Legislature.

"I am really looking forward to coming to Kansas and working with the wonderful librarians there," she said.
