

To describe what Justin meant to myself, family, friends, and any community he found himself apart of will inherently fall far short of the impact he had. Justin was my best friend in college at Florida State University. While there and training to become officers in the United States Army, we grew close. We shared many good times and bad times together. Justin was always there for others, he could be counted on, with no reservations or uncertainty. His caring for others was unsurpassed and was demonstrated over and over again, from his closest family members to a random stranger in need. He brought happiness and empathy to those in trouble, and provided protection, purpose, motivation, and direction to a community of young men and women in their formative years of college. His passion for growth and development of not just himself, but others was unrivaled. One couldn't help but feel certain they were in good hands with this leader.

Justin and his family should be honored with the naming of a memorial highway for the sacrifice they have laid down for their nation. With no reservation they have paid the highest price, with love in their hearts they have carried this burden, and with determination they comfort others who suffer even while suffering themselves. The Sisson's deserve to have their son memorialized in any and all ways that the state of Kansas can provide, I humbly request that you pay them this honor as they have paid a higher price than should be asked of anyone.

Respectfully,
